A new exhibit at The Telephone Museum opened on June 18, 2016. The exhibit is based on the book “Exploding The Phone” by Phil Lapsley. Mr. Lapsley was present at the opening to give a short talk at 1pm and stayed to sign copies of his book. The admission price of $10./adult and $5./child included all museum exhibits. Free admission for museum members.

With a forward by Steve Wozniak, and details about the exploits of the telephone hackers, the book is a timely trip back to the origins of hacking before computers were “personal” and when “Ma Bell” ruled the rates for telephone calls.

Mr. Lapsley was the guest of honor at a reception on Friday, June 17, 2016 at The Telephone Museum.
